1. In October 1949, the Independent Communications Regiment was made up of one telephone and telegraph battalion, one radio battalion, and one low-ranking officer¹ training company with a strength of about 100 men. The telephone and telegraph battalion was composed of three companies, each with a strength of from 100 to 120 men. Each company was divided into three platoons, one of which trained telegraph operators while the other two were devoted to training telephone switchboard operators.

2. Informant identified two officers of the regiment:

Captain Class A Isak Lila - Commanding officer

Captain Class A Qemal Emiri - Supply and transportation officer

1. [REDACTED] Comment: Presumably informant was referring to non-commissioned officers.
